One of the methods of learning a new language is to start with memorising new vocabulary and meaning along with the pronunciation. The Chinese language is particularly hard to master. It has five tones (including the silent tone), and to make things even more complicated, the same word can have different meanings and pronunciations, depending on the context. For instance, the word 回 is used in both HSK 2 and HSK 3 with different meanings and pronunciations. In HSK 2, 回 (with the pinyin hái) means also, still, yet whereas in HSK 3 回 (with the pinyin huán) means to return something. Therefore, it is important to learn the right meaning and pronunciation for the appropriate HSK level. This set of flashcards, along with the supplementary materials, is designed to help you succeed in learning new Chinese words. The supplementary material includes: •Audio files (at a fast and slow rate) •HSK vocabulary writing practice sheets. We have also included printable blank writing practice sheets, which you can print on both sides of an A4 paper. The password and link to download all the files are at the end of the book. Vocabulary is a fundamental part of language learning. This book practises English vocabulary by selecting some of the most important roots in Latin as the focus for studying their derivations together by comparing their meanings and practising affixation. Latin roots form the basis of the major part of modern English vocabulary, especially the type of vocabulary that students need to learn in order to progress to more advanced levels. Latin also provides a rich variety of prefixes and suffixes which work together with the roots to produce new vocabulary. This book provides a unique opportunity for students of English to learn important new vocabulary, to examine how words are formed and to generalise across the roots how affixes create and change meaning. The book consists of explanatory notes on the history of Latin words in English, notes on pronunciation and prefixation, explanatory notes on the roots, and a hundred exercises practising over one thousand words.
